

PowerPoint Poisoning

And Other Presentation Pitfalls for Presenters

Research indicates PowerPoint presentations often interfere with participant comprehension, organization, and retention of information. You are a dynamic presenter with knowledge and experience that will positively impact the work of interpreter practitioners. Are your presentations hindering your message?

What makes an effective presentation? It is more than the content: it includes participant handouts, multimedia (PowerPoint) presentation, and the information you provide.

Participants want presentations that engage them intellectually, visuals which reinforce the content, and quality handout materials that can be referenced again and again. These research-based principles will help you create PowerPoint presentations and participant handouts that compliment your content. You, too, can avoid PowerPoint poisoning in your presentations!

Session facilitator

David N. Evans, RID CI & CT, NIC

Master, has a comprehensive history providing ASL/English interpretations services, working extensively in conference settings as well as in music/performing arts, corporate and community settings. He also provides in-service training to interpreters nationwide on topics related to language, culture, and interpreting issues. David has presented at the 2005 NAOBI conference and two national RID conferences. Presenting since 1992, David's sessions are interactive, entertaining, and informative, creating a relaxed, safe environment for all audiences. David established Bridge Communications in 1996 to further his goals of providing skill-building workshops and video materials for ASL/English interpreters. When not on the road presenting, he makes his home in Minneapolis, where he enjoys playing Frisbee and walks around the city's many lakes.
